Harbor Country Film Group with Eve Moran

Eve screens and discusses Being There, a brilliant little comedy that considers a childlike man called Chance whose entire life consists of tending to a garden and watching television. When circumstances force him into the outside world, Chance's simple thoughts are embraced as profound in high society and political circles. The film is based on a novel by Jerzy Kosinski and stars Peter Sellers, Shirley MacLaine and Melvyn Douglas. Among other things, there is a final sequence in the film that is sure to spark a rich discussion among the audience. Roger Ebert's review from May 1997 gives Being There a 4-star rating. And, of course, there'll be free popcorn for all.

Learn about the night sky. What's up there? How do you observe it? And, how can you learn more? Mike Latus, well-known for his astronomy sessions at Warren Dunes, brings his program to the library. And, weather permitting, Latus will offer views of heavens through his telescope from the library parking lot.

Presenter: Mike Latus was a math and science teacher at River Valley schools for many years. He also worked for Warren Dunes State Park as the summer naturalist. His programs on geology, botany, astronomy and more are legendary.
